Model Answer

These days, more people are making the choice to go to university. While some are of the opinion that the only purpose of a university education is to improve job prospects, others think that society and individuals benefit in much broader ways. In the following essay, I will explore both views and provide my own opinion.

It is without doubt that one of the main objectives of university is to secure a better job. Many individuals want to improve their future career prospects, and attending university improves a person's marketability to potential employers. In addition, further education is a substantial investment for a lot of people, so they would not consider going to university if it did not provide them with the possibility of a more secure future along with a higher standard of living.

However, there are other benefits. To begin with, the independence of living away from home can have positive results, as it helps students develop better social skills and improve their consideration of others. For example, due to location reasons, many students will need to relocate and live in a hall of residence and therefore make new friends. As a result, their maturity and confidence are able to grow. Furthermore, society will gain from the contribution that the graduates can make to the economy. We are living in a very competitive world, so countries need educated and highly skilled people in order to compete and prosper.

Taking all the above into consideration, I believe that although one of the main aims of university education is to obtain a desirable job, there are clearly also additional benefits. If we continue to promote and encourage university attendance, it will lead to a better future for individuals and society as a whole.
